

Union Hall Community Centre Our Story

Built in 1857, Union Hall has served continuously as a place of worship, a library, a meeting place and a community hub since that time. The surrounding community has become known by that name. On the map, along with the place called Union Hall, you will find the Old Union Hall Road and the Union Hall Creek. At one time the Union Hall Tigers baseball team called the area home.

Throughout much of its history, the hall was kept alive largely through the efforts of the Union Hall Women's Institute.

Today the hall is owned by the Union Hall Community Centre, a Registered Charity, whose purpose is to maintain the facility for the benefit of the community.

Union Hall is mainly self-sufficient, with revenue from rentals of the hall and its exterior sign, along with private donations. Our income is supplemented by funding from the Municipality of Mississippi Mills, Almonte Community Coordinators (The Hub/Rebound), the Ontario Trillium Foundation and with additional support from local businesses.
